When I was a child, my parents bought me a book of popular maxims, including such popular sayings as "[E] arly to bed and early to rise makes you healthy, wealthy, and wise." I was so taken with this book that it soon replaced "The Arabian Nights" as my go-to book to read before going to sleep at night.

My love affair with maxims came to an abrupt end, one day, however, when, after I had quoted to an older cousin of mine, "many hands make light work"—I wanted him to help me with a chore I had-- he said in response, "[T]hat may be true, but what about "[T]oo many cooks spoil the broth." What my cousin proceeded to point out to me that day was that, for many axioms, there is a countervailing one, which if not undermining, at least calls into question, the "truth" of the first saying.

I came to better appreciate that day just how complicated life is, and that the "truth," in the words of Ahad Ha'Am, a famous 20th Century Israeli philosopher, is "a 100-sided object with no final answer!"

In the hope of coming closer to finding God's "truth" with regard to many of life's complex and "cutting edge" issues, many people understandably turn to organized religion for answers. Yet the teachings of the 3 Abrahamic Traditions confirm, rather than call into question, the complexity of life.

The following example will hopefully prove my point. While the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church are generally opposed to abortion and gay marriage, a number of recent national surveys reflect that a majority of self-identifying Catholics in this country are pro-choice and support gay marriage; furthermore, if God's "truth" is clear with regard to abortion and gay marriage, why are some Protestant denominations opposed to gay marriage and abortion, while others are strongly pro-choice and supportive of gay marriage; and finally, even in our own religion, the Orthodox movement interprets God's "truth" regarding these 2 issues much differently from a majority of the members in the other 3 major Jewish movements in this country.

Fortunately, the Jewish Tradition has long recognized just how complex life is, and thus teaches that an understanding of God's will and the living of a righteous life both start with the midah, or character trait, of anavah, or "humility".

We learn in the Talmud, for example, that Hillel and Shammai, two of the great first century C.E. rabbis, rarely agreed on any issue. Yet, according to the stam, or "editorial voice" of the Talmud, even when they disagreed on an issue, both Hillel and Shammai spoke "the words of the living God". "How could this be true, if they disagreed with each other," the Talmud asks? The answer the sages give is that they both demonstrated humility in the respectful way that they spoke and listened to each other.

It is this same humility that each of us is called upon to exhibit during the upcoming High Holy Day Season. In his 12th Century classic High Holy Day text, Hilchot Teshuva, "The Laws of Repentance," Maimonides begins by reassuring us that God does not expect any of us to always speak and act in accordance with God's will for us.

What Maimonides does say God expects from us is the following:

1st. Demonstrate the humility and the willingness to undertake a serious heshbon hanefesh, "a personal assessment or accounting," of our strengths, on the one hand, and our faults and foibles, on the other, and to ask ourselves what we may have said and done well the past year, and how and when we may have fallen short of the mark in our relationships with God and with our fellow human beings.

- 2nd. Once we have done this, to apologize sincerely to, and ask forgiveness from, God for anything that we may have said to hurt or disappoint God. Fortunately, as our Tradition and the High Holy Day liturgy make clear, our God is a kind and compassionate God, only too willing to forgive us.
- 3rd. Apologize sincerely to and ask for forgiveness from our family, from our friends, and from any others whom we may have hurt or harmed during the past year. Once we have shown the humility and the courage to do this, our Tradition teaches that the person we have hurt or harmed is now called upon to accept our apology and forgive us, and
- 4th. To reduce the possibility or likelihood of our continuing the same speech and behavior for which we have apologized and asked for forgiveness, we are called upon to make a good faith effort to refrain from this same speech and behavior during the coming year.

Emphasizing just how forgiving and understanding our God is, Maimonides concludes his teaching by reassuring us that, if we do the above 4 things, God will forgive us for our misdeeds of the past year, even if we have done just one more thing right than wrong.

Hillel asks us, in a different context, "[I]f not now, when? With the month of Elul soon to be here, what better time for us to begin to undertake our own personal heshbon hanefesh, or "self-assessment; selecting, perhaps, one, at the most 2, behaviors or character traits that you would like to work on during the coming year.

If I can be of any assistance in this process or on your High Holy Day spiritual journey, please do not hesitate to let me know.

Wishing your loved ones and you a joyful and meaningful High Holy Day Season!

CBI'S & TEMPLE BETH EL'S TREES OF LIFE

It is a Tree of Life to those who hold fast to it!

Many special occasions in the lives of the members of our Congregation are recorded on the leaves of the Trees of Life in the Sanctuary. There is room for more! To honor the special people and milestones in your life, please consider having a leaf engraved with a personalized sentiment.

We now also have rocks available for engraving which will 'strengthen' the base of the tree.

MESSAGE OF THE MONTH FROM THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

By Jon Brody

Olympic Inspiration and Seeds of Hope

As fall approaches and the High Holidays are upon us, I'd be remiss not to talk about the amazing event that just captivated the world and happens every 4 years...the summer Olympics, which took place in Paris, July 26 through August 11. In fact, as you read this article, Ellen and I will just have returned from Olympia, the birthplace of where the Olympics began.

The Olympic Games, which originated in ancient Greece as many as 3,000 years ago, were revived in the late 19th century and have become the world's preeminent sporting competition. From the 8th century B.C. to the 4th century A.D., the Games were held every four years in Olympia, located in the western Peloponnese peninsula, in honor of the god Zeus. The first modern Olympics took place in 1896 in Athens, and featured 280 participants from 12 nations, competing in 43 events. Since 1994, the Summer and Winter Olympic Games have been held separately and have alternated every two years. The 2024 Summer Olympics in Paris included 329 events in 32 "sports", with over 11,000 athletes representing 203 National Olympic Committees, which in most cases are countries, but not in all cases.

I put "sports" in quotations because that is a very subjective term. You have the traditional team sports that many of us are familiar with, like basketball and volleyball. In addition, you have individual events like gymnastics or track and field which are very physically demanding sports. But then you have some target shooting events that just require you to raise your shooting hand and aim. No athleticism required. Each host nation has the option to add or take away certain events as approved through the Olympic Committee. One of this year's new events included "Breaking", commonly known as breakdancing, which originated in the Bronx in the 1970s and will not be part of the Los Angeles Olympics in 2028. Surfing, sport climbing, 3x3 basketball and skateboarding were included in Paris after making their debut in Tokyo four years earlier.

in 1972 when eight Palestinian terrorists from the militant group Black September invaded the Olympic Village on September 5 and killed two members of the Israeli team. Nine other Israelis were held hostage as the terrorists bargained for the release of 200 Palestinian prisoners in Israel. West German police from the regular Bavarian State Police ambushed the terrorists, killing five of the eight Black September members. However, the rescue attempt failed, resulting in the deaths of all the hostages. A West German police officer was also killed in the crossfire. Two days before the start of the 2016 Summer Olympics, Brazilian and Israeli officials led a ceremony where the International Olympic Committee honored the eleven Israelis and one German killed at Munich and during the 2020 Summer Olympics, a moment of silence was observed in the opening ceremony for them.

In this year's Olympics, the Israeli team had 88 athletes competing in 15 sports and ended up with 7 medals: 1 Gold (Tom Reuveny in windsurfing), 5 Silver and 1 Bronze. A record for them.

In 1992, judo champion Yael Arad brought home the first-ever medal after a 40-year wait since Israel's Olympic debut at the Helsinki Games of 1952. Twelve years ago, she joined the Olympic Committee of Israel, becoming part of the process of bringing Israel to the international level of Olympic sport. Arad brought her insights from the business world and helped implement effective metrics and financial planning. Israel understood that to improve its Olympic achievements it needed to consider its size and relative strength. To that end, five sports were chosen to receive excess funding: athletics, gymnastics, swimming, sailing, and judo.

The Olympic Committee of Israel understood that the state budget alone couldn't provide for the professional development needed to compete with leading teams, so partnerships were developed with 11 businesses, including Bank Hapoalim, Arkia, and Shufersal. A scientific-medical support system - employing 110 people – was developed to provide athletes full support in nutrition, medicine, therapy, and data analysis. It was also decided to offer significant financial rewards to winning athletes: NIS500,000 for a bronze medal, NIS750,000 for a silver, and NIS 1 million for a gold – all tax-free. This has positioned Israel as a world leader in rewarding its athletes.

So, where does Israel stand relative to the rest of the world regarding their medal achievement?

An analysis of the 88 countries that won 1,026 medals in Paris shows a positive correlation between GDPs per capita and achieving Olympic success. After all, a country with more resources can allocate more funds to development.

Looking at the Middle East, it's clear that Israel has performed impressively compared to Arab countries (that achieved 0.75 medals per million residents). In contrast, countries such as Egypt, Jordan, Iran, and Turkey ended up with results that don't reflect their population, size, or economy. And there was great disappointment among countries like the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia, for example, whose athletes went home empty-handed this year. The exception was Bahrain, winning four medals — an impressive achievement given the kingdom's small size.

But if we zoom out, it's evident that Israel's achievement in Paris was statistically normal and reflected a result that matches its population, size, and resources. When Israel won a silver and a bronze medal in 1992, it had only half its current population (5.1 million), and its GDP per capita was significantly lower. Those medals were a huge achievement. Seven medals for Israel 2024 were what is now expected.

However, looking at other countries with similar population sizes, it's clear there's still room for improvement. Hungary, for example, won 19 medals (1.9 medals per million), Sweden won 11 (1.04 medals per million), and Croatia, like Israel, garnered seven medals – but with about a third of Israel's population. What's the difference between Israel and them? For one, these countries have been hovering around 10 million residents for several decades and have established a sports tradition with impressive systems, while Israel, 30 years ago, was half its current size.

A CHART compares Israel's performance at the Paris Olympics with that of other Middle Eastern countries and those with a similar population size to the Jewish state.

MESSAGE OF THE MONTH FROM THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

By Jon Brody

The amazing thing about the Olympics is that for the most part, politics and nations fighting against nations are set aside for the period while the Olympics are taking place. When the boats were riding down the Siene during the opening ceremonies, the announcer discussed that one or more nations were on each boat and they were being presented in alphabetical order (with some exceptions), but then he made the comment, "Of course, Iran and Iraq need to be on separate boats even though their contingents could have fit on one." Then he mentioned Israel was sharing a boat with 3 other countries, but they were being subject to a much higher level of security for obvious reasons." The "Israeli delegation, which is being guarded by elite French tactical units, receives a few boos but a lot of cheers as athletes sail down river in armada to kick off the 2024 Games."

Russia was not present in this Olympics, but not for political reasons as in some past years or because of the Ukraine war. Most of their athletes were banned for doping issues, however 204 Russian athletes participated under the general "Refugee Olympic Committee" Team.

Many of you may have heard in the news about two South and North Korea athletes who took a smiling selfie together. That is just one of many examples of how the direct human connection of the athletes overrode the higher-level political challenges that plague our world.

In some past Olympics, I heard of specific athletes refusing to compete against athletes from specific other countries. Many of those were Arab athletes refusing to compete against an Israeli athlete, but I did not hear of those issues this year.

I think the Olympics provide a prime example of what is possible. That we can still hope for the Prayer for Peace that we read every Shabbat. "May we see the day when war and bloodshed cease, when a great peace will embrace the whole world. Then nation will not threaten nation and mankind will not again know war."

I hope you have a very meaningful and peaceful New Year filled with apples and honey and everything sweet and hope to see you at our Sukkah Party in October.
